Strategic and Tactical ALIGNMENT

Creating Cross-departmental Unity, Collaboration, Synergy, and Stability

While many organizational departments or divisions perform their own function or produce their own work (products, services, etc.) well, some fall short in their interrelationships with other departments, functional areas or divisions. These challenges between organizational groups can hamper overall company effectiveness and limit profits and growth. The symptoms of poor inter-departmental alignment include: poor communication, lack of collaboration, failure to harvest synergies, distrust and unhealthy competition, and inconsistency in processes, policies and methods. Our alignment programs synchronize and harmonize two or more departments, functional areas, or divisions while elevating the performance of all involved. Groups will identify shared goals, open up communication lines, become unified, capitalize on their collective strengths, build trusting relationships, and create consistent processes, procedures, policies, and methods.
